UK Outlook for Saturday 24 Jul 2021 to Saturday 7 Aug 2021:
For the rest of July and into early August, warmer and drier-than-average conditions are most probable overall. Occasional spells of more unsettled weather still remain possible, especially in northwestern areas, but the majority of the UK should see plenty of fine and dry weather. There is a low risk of temporary thundery conditions developing, especially across the south and east of the country, with a possibility of more changeable weather towards mid-August, with predictability becoming very low by then. Above-average temperatures continue to be signalled for much of the period, with some potential for hot periods in the south.
